However, a new report from Thomson Reuters Eikon revealed that the figure was vastly inflated by having been broken down into 'significant' and 'low volume' categories. Using the definitions applied by the ATO, a total of 203 Australian businesses had used offshore services in the past financial year. However, the Australian Tax Office (ATO) only reported the use of offshore services by 10,732 businesses that paid $1 billion or more in annual tax. The ATO did not release data on how many of the 203 reported Australian businesses were 'significant' or 'low volume' users of offshore services, or how much tax those companies avoided. As a result, the total number of Australian companies using offshore services is much higher, according to Eikon. The report also revealed that there were more than 1.5 million Australian companies registered with the ATO and that 22 percent of these were using offshore services. Australian dollar not part of offshore services tax avoidance While data shows that there are many Australian companies using offshore services, the report also shows that the vast majority of them do not pay taxes on that money. The Australian dollar is not mentioned once in the report, which means that many Australian businesses are able to generate offshore profits, but avoid paying taxes on those profits. The Australian Dollar is 'invisible' in the ATO's figures, because it is not mentioned in Eikon's report. Tax avoidance in Australia can come from a number of sources, including people using shell companies to avoid having to pay tax in Australia, or transferring money to countries where taxes are lower. As Australia has no capital gains tax, any income generated offshore can be ignored by businesses in the country. The report also showed that there were more than 5,000 companies that had used a 'tax haven' to avoid paying Australian taxes, but did not specify which countries these were. Many business owners use tax havens The tax avoidance industry is one of the fastest growing in the 2d92ce491b
