Unlike fire coral or a starfish, they do not have tentacles, but a central body and two pincers on the end. A swarm of jellyfish is called a "jellyfish mass." Jellyfish venom is often released in jellyfish masses. The venom is highly toxic to humans, and may produce a painful rash, severe abdominal pain, swelling, nausea, vomiting, shock, and seizures. We caught a jellyfish in the shallow water at Shark Key in 1990. The tentacles were plump and greenish-blue. Its sting was mild. Jellyfish are sometimes called "coral killers." This is because a giant jellyfish such as the huge Australian Lion's Mane (Chrysaora gigas) eats entire colonies of coral polyps! It can eat up to 1,000 corals a day. The young tentacles and umbrella of jellyfish are called "snot-noses." Jellyfish stings are sometimes fatal. But because there is no known cure, scientists are working to develop a vaccine and other treatments.Q: How do you make a Google Drive public access in Go?
