Tuktuk, Daddy, Jacky, and ... three back to school must-haves for your baby's first day of preschool. When the sun comes out for the first time, the temperature soars. Kids love making friends, and kindergarten is the perfect time to make new friends, but while it's a great time to meet new friends, it's also a tricky time to teach kids about boundaries. However, when parents make their kids feel safe and secure in this new environment, they're more likely to be social and try out new things. The first thing to do is teach your child how to keep himself safe. The pediatrician can discuss the importance of this with you as well. Consider your child's age. Some preschools are best for 2-year-olds, while others are designed for the 3-and-unders. Make sure you pick the right kind of preschool for your child's age. They might need a new diaper or a haircut before they go to school. Make sure the resources your school has in place include a schedule for your child's last-minute needs. In my years of schooling, the school I attended had a really convenient resource in the form of a notebook where we could keep track of our child's needs. It was really helpful in making the transition to kindergarten. The most important part of school is to make your child comfortable and confident enough to try new things. Be aware of your child's behavior. They might be just a little clingy or too quiet. If you notice any signs of your child feeling scared, the best thing to do is to have a sit down with the teacher to discuss any concerns. School is a great place to learn about the arts. When you're picking out artsy supplies, look for ones with bright
