Amazon on Tuesday doubled down on its plans to announce a new health insurance product during its next earnings report in July, as a growing number of U.S. companies are looking for ways to attract and keep employees. The e-commerce giant plans to hold a press conference in July to announce its participation in the new Affordable Care Act exchange, according to two people familiar with the situation. The company wants to make a splash, and is preparing to announce an insurance product it doesn't plan to sell directly, these people said. As part of its plans, the company will submit documents to Washington's federal insurance regulator in early June that lay out the policy's underwriting and pricing criteria and some of its enrollment requirements. The company is targeting a July date for the news conference to coincide with the launch of the second year of the ACA. The new health insurance program is a bet that a small percentage of Amazon's employees will shop around for health coverage on the exchange and select a plan offered through the company, rather than one offered by their employer. Amazon is most likely planning to offer employees a choice of plans that it will cover 100 percent of premium costs for through the company's existing group insurance program. The plans would be geared towards its employees' preferences and needs, and would probably cover high-end plans that offer little or no coverage for preventive care or emergency services, the people said. Amazon has been testing its own plan in California, which will
