Abstract Electric fields and strain in carbon nanotubes create their distinctive characteristics. In this study, arrays of parallel-aligned carbon nanotubes were fabricated using a novel method that utilizes liquid metal. The nanotubes exhibit a high mechanical strength, enabling them to hold together a paperclip. The stiffness of the nanotube array was characterized by measuring the sound-absorbing performance of the carbon nanotube arrays in the acoustic range, demonstrating that the carbon nanotube array can be used as an acoustic damping material. Furthermore, we used the carbon nanotube array for a high-speed folding system, demonstrating a remarkable mechanical stability. Notes Acknowledgments We thank Mr. S. Pages Monday, January 18, 2011 Carnival of Books: Jackie's Lament Today's Carnival of Books is a very special one: it's my first time participating and I am thrilled to introduce you to Jackie's Lament, the book you are about to see, a book inspired by The Hunger Games by Suzanne Collins. I want to thank everyone for being so supportive and welcoming. I know I'm not the best blogger, but I'm loving the journey and I hope you'll stick around. To all the readers who have seen the movie, I ask you to please, please, please, go read the book first. Read it, read it, read it... So here we go. The book is about a girl named Cassia and her decisions. Will she abide by the Capitol's orders, fight for her life, or try to escape? In her head, she says, "I must stay. I must, because my little sister... She's worth the pain... The pain of a world without her." But she's a princess and an outsider in the Capitol. That's where her fate will be decided. Will she live or die?
