However, little is known about the prevalence and risk factors of such disorders among elderly patients who visit the emergency department (ED) with acute ophthalmologic conditions. The objective of this study was to investigate the prevalence and risk factors for ophthalmologic disorders in older adults with acute ophthalmologic problems. All patients aged 65 years and older who visited the ED with acute ophthalmologic problems between February 2010 and July 2013 at a single hospital were enrolled in this retrospective case-control study. The prevalence of ophthalmologic disorders was compared between the emergency room ophthalmology ED and other departments with cases (cases) and controls (controls). We performed logistic regression analyses to investigate risk factors for ophthalmologic disorders among cases. Among 384 patients with acute ophthalmologic problems, 102 had an ophthalmologic disorder, including chorioretinal lesions (10.5%), glaucoma (9.9%), vitreous detachment (5.9%), and conjunctivitis (4.9%). The odds ratio (95% confidence interval)
