Smith, 535 F.3d 883, 886 (8th Cir. 2008). Robinson urges us to vacate his sentence because the district court “failed to consider the Section 3553(a) factors or to set forth a meaningful rationale for its imposition of a 110 month sentence when a variance would have been more reasonable.” Robinson essentially reasserts the argument he raised in support of his request for a downward variance. See supra, note 4. The district court expressly addressed that argument and stated that it had considered the factors in § 3553(a) and that Robinson’s career offender status outweighed any other factors. The sentence imposed by the district court is within the guidelines range. There is nothing in the record to suggest that the sentence was imposed in an arbitrary or capricious manner or that the district court failed to consider a relevant factor. We find the district court’s decision to impose a 110 month sentence as a variance appropriate in this case. Conclusion For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the sentence imposed by the district court. Jeff Morse Justice Panel consists of Chief Justice Radack and Justices Jennings and Sharp. [

The relative suitability of professional job applicants for different professional careers. A sample of 207 graduate professional jobs was evaluated using the Information Processing Task Analysis. Different measures of the suitability of the tasks to the professional careers concerned were obtained. These were used as a means of estimating the relative attractiveness of the different careers. The careers judged to be most attractive were those which required the most data handling and analyzing. One industry was found to produce most suitable jobs, the health industry. The health jobs were also found to be most suitable for men and women. The jobs judged least suitable were those which required dealing with and understanding people and general psychological phenomena. By implication, certain careers were judged to be best suited to men and women. 3.3 Hz) 1 2d92ce491b
