It's not as hardcore as the frenchcore, and it's not as soft as the gabber, but it's got all the glory of both. Add to that the fact that it's got all the style and creativity of the frenchcore, and you'll see why this thing is so great. This is an EZ mixing for the frenchcore. It's a meaner, faster and more catchy version of regular mixing. If you know mixing, don't expect to know how it works, but enjoy the fun! 1. Listen for the intro, which is about 2:30. This is great for working out songs or just playing around. It's all beat matching. 2. Here's an example of a typical frenchcore song. It's the first song, "Constant Lovin." Listen to the baseline, it's just one note, but it's following the drums. 3. The faders are in Push mode. In Push mode, the faders stay where you set them. If you have Push up to 12, you have that range of the faders. You'll be using this at least once a day. It's just faster to use the Push up 12 than to fade. 4. This is the signal chain. If you go into Push up, it's going to play the file on the top. So you'll be hearing it as it's playing. 5. You'll be bouncing the top and bottom parts to each other. By doing that, it sounds like there's two parts to it, but it's only one. 6. To the left of the faders is where you can do things like adding effects. You can add EQ. 7. The next to the left is where the pitch and tempo knobs are. Pitch is the tempo. 8. This is where you can add parts. If you have a series of parts, this is where you can start them. 9. This is where you can adjust the balance. As you adjust the balance, that will come out in the mix. 10. This is where you add automation. So you can do this to the effects or to other parts. 11. You can add automation to the drum tracks, to the parts, to the mixing, to the mastering. The mastering automation is on the bottom. That's where you can do the
