Category:Software architecture Category:Free Integrated Development Environments and little ambiguity over what happens to the Southern states. I, for one, could not be more pleased to have lost a race with The Donald. I am not going to pretend to suffer any more regret over it than I already have. Friday, October 10, 2016 Dear Friends, I know you are waiting for the end result of this year's election, and there is little doubt that the Republican Party has changed, but it is still a campaign and not a process. I don't have any idea what my future holds, but whatever it is it is not being dictated by Donald Trump. To the rank and file Republicans who have accepted his candidacy as a protest, I say this: you have a real opportunity here. You have a major chance to do something that has eluded the Republicans for decades — you can reject the madness of the Party and the nomination of Donald Trump. You can start a third party, or you can settle for the second rank with the Republican Party. If you are sick of the GOP's fealty to an ultra-wealthy donor base and a banker-mafioso -type Party infrastructure, all you have to do is vote for Hillary. The Republican leadership has already proved that it will do what is necessary to thwart her. Look for a House vote by October 11th to enact H.R. 6660, which would remove the Secretary of State's right to clean up the voter rolls, and defund an independent election integrity task force created by the Obama Administration. House Republicans are already planning to hold hearings on Voter ID, which will end up the same way it usually does. (See this piece in the New York Times for the how and why.) Don't delay, vote for her. The reality is that the challenges we face are serious, but the resolve to deal with them will not be, and Republicans will not be able to secure their legacy as we did on marriage equality. The response of the Right to anti-intellectual populism and irrationality is not going to save us either. If they were smart, they would be working on some moderate ideas to court the swing vote. Instead, we are looking at all the same fallbacks, and some new ones. Most of the Republicans running for office are not very informed about the issues, and they claim to be angry at big money and establishment politics when 570a42141b
